❧ NOTICE. ❧

THIS Collection of Books, Engravings and Catalogues differs from ordinary collections, chiefly because Mr. Trumble had, for more than a quarter of a century, a distinct and well-defined object in view. He purchased books with but small regard for their bindings, with no thought for their appearance on the bookshelves, but solely for their historical, artistic or literary value, and as aids to verification of the authenticity of works of art brought to this country. Having achieved a wide reputation as an expert, many expensive books and engravings were sent to him for his opinion, which he usually gave with deliberation and admirable judgment in "THE COLLECTOR," which he owned and edited. But he loved his books, and, from time to time, as his limited means permitted, he spent goodly sums for bookbinding, of which art he was a connoisseur. His artistic purpose is to be discovered in many of the apparently worthless books, preserved, perhaps, on account of some early effort of a subsequently great artist, and even in the large collection of wood engravings, cut from ordinary books and magazines. As for the collection of Catalogues, it is probably unique.
